

FIRST DIVISION

[ G.R. No. 212861, October 14, 2015 ]

DECISION

PERLAS-BERNABE, J.:

Assailed in this petition for review on certiorari<sup>[1]</sup> are the Decision<sup>[2]</sup> dated February 25, 2014 and the Resolution<sup>[3]</sup> dated June 6, 2014 of the Court of Appeals (CA) in CA-G.R. SP No. 129669, which modified the Resolutions dated December 28, 2012<sup>[4]</sup> and February 6, 2013<sup>[5]</sup> of the National Labor Relations Commission (NLRC) in NLRC NCR Case No. 07-10686-11 and, accordingly, declared petitioner Melvin P. Mallo (Mallo) to have abandoned his job, hence, not entitled to backwages, separation pay, and attorney's fees.

The Facts

The instant case arose from a complaint<sup>[6]</sup> for, inter alia, unfair labor practice, illegal dismissal, underpayment of salary/wages, damages, and attorney's fees filed by Mallo against respondents Southeast Asian College, Inc. (SACI) and its Executive President/Chief Executive Officer, Edita F. Enatsu (Enatsu; collectively, respondents) before the NLRC.<sup>[7]</sup> Mallo alleged that SACI first hired him as a Probationary Full-Time Faculty Member of its College of Nursing and Midwifery with the rank of Assistant Professor C for the Second Semester of School Year (SY) 2007-2008<sup>[8]</sup> and, thereafter, his employment was renewed<sup>[9]</sup> for the succeeding semesters until the Summer Semester of SY 2010-2011.<sup>[10]</sup> On June 3 and 8, 2011, Mallo inquired about his teaching load for the First Semester of SY 2011-2012, but SACI only responded that teaching assignments for the semester were yet to be given to faculty members.<sup>[11]</sup> Thereafter, on June 15, 2011, he learned from a co-professor that faculty meetings were conducted on June 9 and 10, 2011 whereby teaching loads were distributed to the professors.<sup>[12]</sup> Upon learning of this development, Mallo went again to SACI to confront the Dean of the College of Nursing, Dr. Clarita D. Curato (Dr. Curato). Claiming that he was already a permanent employee of SACI, having been a professor of SACI for almost four (4) years since his first teaching assignment in November 2007, Mallo demanded that he be given his corresponding teaching load. However, Dr. Curato simply retorted that the school was under no obligation to give him any teaching loads for the semester because he was merely a contractual employee.<sup>[13]</sup> As such, Mallo was constrained to file the instant complaint against respondents.

In their defense, respondents denied dismissing Mallo, maintaining that as early as April 2011 and as evidenced by Dr. Curato's letter<sup>[14]</sup> to the Medical Center Chief II of the National Center for Mental Health (NCMH), SACI already gave Mallo his teaching load for the First Semester of SY 2011-2012 - as Clinical Instructor for the College of Nursing's Preceptorship Program, an on-the-job mentoring and ongoing clinical experience of students under the Nursing Related Learning Experience (NLRE) curriculum, to be conducted at NCMH.<sup>[15]</sup> Unfortunately, Mallo twice failed the qualifying test required for the job. This notwithstanding, SACI endeavored to give Mallo a teaching load by appointing him as a Clinical Instructor for Preceptorship Program to be conducted at the United Doctors Medical Center (UDMC) instead, beginning June 23, 2011, which he accepted.<sup>[16]</sup> However, a day before he was set to start as a Clinical Instructor at UDMC, Mallo asked for a change in schedule, which was denied as it would entail a reshuffle of the entire NLRE schedule of the school.<sup>[17]</sup> On June 23 to 25, 2011, Mallo did not attend his classes at UDMC. This prompted a SACI official to contact Mallo if he would report for work the following day, to which the latter allegedly replied in the negative as his schedule with SACI conflicted with his new employment. Thereafter, SACI never heard from Mallo again until he filed the instant case.<sup>[18]</sup>

The Labor Arbiter's Ruling

In a Decision<sup>[19]</sup> dated July 30, 2012, the LA found Mallo to have been illegally dismissed and, accordingly, ordered SACI to pay him backwages, separation pay in lieu of reinstatement, service incentive leave pay, 13 month pay, and attorney's fees.<sup>[20]</sup>

It held that, contrary to respondents' assertion, Mallo's employment was originally probationary in nature, which eventually lapsed into a permanent one after having completed three (3) consecutive years of satisfactory service and having possessed the required masteral degrees pursuant to the Manual of Regulations for Private Schools (Manual).<sup>[21]</sup> In this regard, the LA found no evidence to support respondents' claim that Mallo refused his appointment as Clinical Instructor at UDMC or that he failed the qualifying tests at NCMH.<sup>[22]</sup> In this light, the LA concluded that respondents' failure to give Mallo any teaching load for the First Semester of SY 2011-2012 is tantamount to the latter's illegal dismissal. On the other hand, the LA saw no basis to support Mallo's monetary claims except for his service incentive leave pay, which he was legally entitled to, having completed more than one (1) year of service, his 13th month pay, and attorney's fees for having been compelled to litigate.<sup>[23]</sup>

Aggrieved, respondents appealed<sup>[24]</sup> to the NLRC, docketed as NLRC NCR Case No. 07-10686-11/NLRC LAC No. 11-003164-12.

The NLRC Ruling

In a Resolution<sup>[25]</sup> dated December 28, 2012, the NLRC affirmed the LA ruling. It did not give credence to respondents' claim that Mallo did not teach in the First Semester of SY 2008-2009 and, thus, did not complete the required six (6) regular semesters of satisfactory service for him to attain the status of being a regular employee. In this regard, the NLRC noted the Social Security System (SSS) Inquiry Report showing that SACI contributed SSS premiums for Mallo beginning January to December of 2008, hence, could not have been employed only on the 2nd Semester of SY 2008-2009.<sup>[26]</sup> It likewise rejected respondents' assertion that Mallo's performance had not been satisfactory, considering that he was repeatedly hired for seven (7) straight regular semesters and despite having failed NCMH's qualifying tests, he was nonetheless given another assignment at UDMC.<sup>[27]</sup> In the same vein, it found no abandonment on the part of Mallo, holding that no evidence was presented to show that the latter had clearly intended to sever his employment with respondents and, considering further that he had instituted the instant complaint.<sup>[28]</sup> The NLRC, however, reduced the award for the 13th month pay to P39,863.94 based on the evidence that SACI already paid Mallo a total of P75,356.03 as 13th month pay.<sup>[29]</sup>

Respondents moved for reconsideration,<sup>[30]</sup> but the same was denied in a Resolution<sup>[31]</sup> dated February 6, 2013. Dissatisfied, they elevated the matter to the CA via a petition for certiorari.<sup>[32]</sup>

The CA Ruling

In a Decision<sup>[33]</sup> dated February 25, 2014, the CA modified the NLRC ruling and, thereby, declared Mallo to have abandoned his job and, thus, not entitled to backwages, separation pay in lieu of reinstatement, and attorney's fees.<sup>[34]</sup> It held that while Mallo had indeed attained the status of a regular employee, there was no illegal dismissal to speak of as the evidence on record failed to show any overt or positive act on respondents' part to terminate his employment.<sup>[35]</sup> In this relation, the CA pointed out that SACI gave Mallo a teaching load for the First Semester of SY 2011-2012 as a Clinical Instructor, which he even accepted. It was only when Mallo's request for a change in schedule at UDMC was denied that he failed to attend his classes and refused to accept his new work assignment in view of the conflict in his new employment.<sup>[36]</sup> The CA ruled that the totality of Mallo's acts, i.e., not attending his classes, his refusal to work, and obtaining new employment, clearly constituted abandonment on his part, resulting in the deletion of the awards of backwages, separation pay, and attorney's fees in his favor.<sup>[37]</sup> The CA, however, retained the awards of service incentive leave pay and 13th month pay as rendered by the NLRC.

Dissatisfied, Mallo filed a motion for reconsideration<sup>[38]</sup> on March 17, 2014, which was, however, denied in a Resolution<sup>[39]</sup> dated June 6, 2014; hence, this petition.

The Issue Before the Court

The essential issue for the Court's resolution is whether or not the CA correctly ruled there was no illegal dismissal and that Mallo abandoned his job.

The Court's Ruling

The petition is partly meritorious.

At the outset, the Court notes that the LA, the NLRC, and the CA were one in declaring that Mallo's employment with SACI had already attained the status of a regular employee. However, a scrutiny of the records reveals that their factual findings differ as to whether or not Mallo was illegally dismissed or had abandoned his job. In this regard, it bears stressing that in petitions for review on certiorari under Rule 45 of the Rules of Court, the scope of the Court's judicial review is generally confined to errors of law and does not extend to a re-evaluation of the sufficiency of the evidence upon which the lower courts and/or quasi-judicial agencies had based their determination.<sup>[40]</sup> Indeed, it is axiomatic that the factual findings of the LA and the NLRC, especially when affirmed by the CA, are accorded not only great respect, but also finality, and are deemed binding upon the Court so long as they are supported by substantial evidence.<sup>[41]</sup> However, in instances where there is a divergence in the findings of facts of the NLRC and that of the CA, there is a need for the Court to review the records to determine which of them should be preferred as more conformable to evidentiary facts,<sup>[42]</sup> as in this case.

Here, Mallo insists that respondents illegally dismissed him because the latter failed to give him any teaching load for the First Semester of SY 2011-2012. On the other hand, respondents vehemently deny Mallo's claims, maintaining that they promptly gave him his teaching assignment and that the latter even initially accepted the same, but such assignment was eventually turned down due to a conflict in schedule with his new employment in another school.

In termination cases, the onus of proving that an employee was not dismissed or, if dismissed, his dismissal was not illegal fully rests on the employer; the failure to discharge such onus would mean that the dismissal was not justified and, therefore, illegal.<sup>[43]</sup>

The records readily show that as early as April 2011, respondents already assigned Mallo a teaching load for the First Semester of SY 2011-2012 as a Clinical Instructor for SACI students to be assigned at NCMH, which the latter accepted. Unfortunately, Mallo failed the qualifying tests at NCMH twice, thus, virtually disqualifying him from performing his work as SACFs Clinical Instructor thereat. Despite these developments, respondents were able to remedy the situation, albeit belatedly, by assigning Mallo as a Clinical Instructor at UDMC instead, as shown in the Tentative Faculty Loading dated June 24, 2011.<sup>[44]</sup> In view of the foregoing, the Court is inclined to hold that respondents never dismissed Mallo from his job.

While the Court concurs with the CA that Mallo was not illegally dismissed, the Court does not agree that he had abandoned his work. The concept of abandonment in labor law had been thoroughly discussed in Tan Brothers Corporation of Basilan City v. Escudero:<sup>[45]</sup>

As defined under established jurisprudence, abandonment is the deliberate and unjustified refusal of an employee to resume his employment. It constitutes neglect of duty and is a just cause for termination of employment under paragraph (b) of Article 282 [now Article 296<sup>[46]</sup>] of the Labor Code. To constitute abandonment, however, there must be a clear and deliberate intent to discontinue one's employment without any intention of returning. In this regard, two elements must concur: (1) failure to report for
