In 2013, the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, Nkosazana Dlamini-Zuma, requested that the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) undertake three regional studies to examine the root causes of conflict in the Great Lakes, Sahel and Horn of Africa regions and to assess the costs and consequences of conflict for development.

The Conflict and Development programme accordingly benefited from the overall leadership, guidance and unwavering commitment of the Executive Secretary of ECA, Carlos Lopes, and the Deputy Executive Secretary for Knowledge Generation and Chief Economist, Abdalla Hamdok, who actively supported the preparation of the three regional studies.

This report was prepared under the intellectual leadership of Adeyemi Dipeolu, Director of the Capacity Development Division of ECA. Emebet Mesfin was instrumental in coordinating the technical contributions in the production of the report. The report also benefited from the contributions and administrative support of colleagues in the Capacity Development Division, including Joseph Atta-Mensah, Jalal Abdel-Latif, Kwabia Boateng, Adeyemi Adeyinka, Hodane Youssouf, Francis Ikome, Lucie-Delphine Boucher, Fernand Jean-Francois Pissang Keller, Firmin Vlaronou, Bilisson Hassen, Aster Yitayew and Sissay Tadesse. Other ECA staff members who provided invaluable support include Antonio Pedro, Andrew Mold and Marit Kitaw.

The report was prepared by Léonce Ndikumana, Professor of Economics at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, who benefited from substantive contributions from Emizet F. Kisangani and Isaac Kalonda-Kanyama. ECA is very grateful for the interviews and discussion during the field work across the Great Lakes and beyond, which were essential for distilling the public understanding of the nature of the conflicts and the challenges associated with ongoing efforts to resolve them. We also appreciate the comments from the reviewers of the report, Mohamed Salih, Martha Mutisi, Andrew Mold, Funmi Olonisakin, Claude Kabemba, Charles Abiodun Alao and Olawale Ismail, as well as the constructive suggestions from the participants at the Expert Group Meeting held on 9 and 10 December 2014 in Addis Ababa.
