The “Hydropolitical Vulnerability and Resilience along International Waters” project, directed by Aaron T. Wolf and managed by Marcia F. Macomber, both of Oregon State University (OSU), USA, is a collaboration between the United Nations Environment Programme – Division of Early Warning and Assessment (UNEP-DEWA) and the Universities Partnership for Transboundary Waters. The Partnership is an international consortium of water expertise, including ten universities on five continents, seeking to promote a global water governance culture that incorporates peace, environmental protection, and human security <<http://waterpartners.geo.orst.edu>>.

Hydropolitical Vulnerability and Resilience along International Waters: Latin America and the Caribbean is the second of a five-part series of continental reports. This volume was compiled in collaboration between UNEP-DEWA, OSU’s Transboundary Freshwater Dispute Database (TFDD) Research Group, and Universidad Nacional Costa Rica, Mesoamerican Center for Sustainable Development of the Dry Tropics (UNA-CEMEDE). “Hydropolitical Vulnerability and Resilience: Series Introduction (Chapter 1)” was authored by Aaron T. Wolf, Oregon State University, Department of Geosciences. “Hydropolitical Resilience and Vulnerability in Central America and the West Indies” (Chapter 2) was authored by Alexander López Ramírez, Universidad Nacional, Costa Rica. “Hydropolitical Resilience and Vulnerability in South America” (Chapter 3) was authored by Joshua T. Newton of OSU. Maps throughout the report and tables in the appendices were compiled by the Transboundary Freshwater Dispute Database (TFDD) Research Team (Department of Geosciences, OSU), which includes Marloes Bakker, Melissa Carper, Ryan Dey, Nathan Eidem, Barbara Geren, Samuel Littlefield, and Erick Stemmerman.
