Agriculture trade in Asia Pacific

- Agriculture accounts for a quarter of the gross domestic product (GDP) of Asia-Pacific's developing countries and employs about 60% of the region's working population (ESCAP 2008).
- Improving agricultural productivity could pull 218 million people out of poverty in this region (ESCAP 2008).
- It can bring investment opportunities for the private sector, and be a driver for boosting agriculture related industries.
- The World Bank estimates that GDP growth originating in agriculture is at least twice as effective in reducing poverty as GDP growth originating outside agriculture.
