UN-Habitat

The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) came into being in 1996 (its precursor was established in 1975) to coordinate all matters related to human settlements and to promote and consolidate collaboration with all partners, including local authorities and private and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and Target 7d of the Millennium Development Goals (“Achieve, by 2020, a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum dwellers”).

UN-Habitat has been active in Somalia for over twenty-five years. In recent years, its core operations have focused on a wide range of issues spanning from developing infrastructure to strengthening local governance. UN-Habitat has been working since 2008 on the UN Joint Programme on Local Governance and Decentralized Service Delivery. Its flagship projects under this framework concentrate on the following: municipal finance, solid and biomedical waste management, participatory urban planning and management, and capacity development for local governance, including infrastructure development and rehabilitation and land governance.

The UN Joint Programme on Local Governance and Decentralized Service Delivery

The UN Joint Programme on Local Governance and Decentralized Service Delivery (JPLG) was launched in Somalia in 2008. Under this initiative, five UN agencies, funds, and programmes have been supporting the Federal Government of Somalia, the Government of Puntland State of Somalia, and the Government of Somaliland. The key objectives of the programme deal with (i) supporting policy and legislative reforms for functional fiscal and administrative decentralization that clarify and enhance the role of local government, its relationship to central government, and service delivery; (ii) improving the capacity of local government for equitable service delivery; (iii) improving and expanding the delivery of sustainable services to citizens in an equitable, responsive, and socially accountable manner, as well as promoting local economic environments.
