UNHCR Livelihoods Unit in Brazil is promoting several initiatives with the aim to mitigate the socioeconomic impacts on the refugee population and persons of concern. Our actions are implemented directly or through a network of implementing partners spread throughout the country, as well as through partnerships with Federal, State and Municipal Governments, with civil society organizations, other UN agencies, with organizations working in development programs and with private companies. Understood as a driver for local integration, the Interiorization strategy led by the Federal Government, entails the voluntary relocation of Venezuelans from Roraima to other states in Brazil with better employment prospects.
