The workshop to review and plan therapeutic efficacy studies (TES) to monitor Plasmodium falciparum and Plasmodium vivax resistance to anti-malarial drugs in the Greater Mekong Subregion was jointly organized by the WHO Regional Offices for South-East Asia and the Western Pacific, the Global Malaria Programme in WHO headquarters, and was coordinated by the WHO Mekong Malaria Programme Office in Bangkok. The workshop was co-hosted by the National Institute of Parasitic Diseases - CDC Shanghai and the Yunnan Institute of Parasitic Diseases with the WHO country office in Beijing, China.

The organizers of the workshop thank all facilitators for their technical inputs and assistance to ensure monitoring of TES country plans in the Mekong countries. The organizers also thank all country programme managers, principal investigators and representatives from Mekong countries for their involvement in the proper and timely implementation of TES country proposals planned since 2007, and for their continued commitment and interest in the in vivo TES Mekong Malaria Programme (MMP) network.

The WHO Mekong Malaria Programme wishes to acknowledge the technical support from partners, and financial support from the United States Agency for International Development-President's Malaria Initiative (USAID-PMI) to convene this workshop and for its continuous support to the in vivo TES MMP network.
