KEY MESSAGE

NONCOMMUNICABLE DISEASES (NCD) are a critical health and development issue for the Western Pacific Region. Government leadership and political commitment are essential to coordinate the necessary multisectoral response to the regional NCD burden. Cost-effective interventions exist and need to be prioritized for scaling up in countries. To achieve this, health systems need to strengthen prevention and to ensure NCD control is integrated into primary health care, using the Chronic Care model. Resources for noncommunicable diseases need to be enhanced and sustained to achieve measurable improvements in the health of the Region's people.
