Biographical sketches of the authors

Enrico Pavignani worked in Mozambique from 1980 until 2002, first as a district doctor, then as a trainer of mid-level health workers, and subsequently as a planner and policy analyst posted to the Ministry of Health. He has studied the health systems of Afghanistan, Angola, Democratic Republic of Congo, Liberia, Occupied Palestinian Territory, Tanzania, Somalia and Sudan. Since 2000 he has collaborated with the World Health Organization, mainly on the development of training materials. His main interests are planning and evaluation of health services, human resource development, Primary Health Care provision, management of external aid, analysis of war-torn health sectors and post-conflict reconstruction.

Sandro Colombo started his career as medical epidemiologist in Italy. Since 1986 to 1998 he worked in Mozambique as epidemiologist and trainer at the Ministry of Health. He has worked for various United Nations agencies for the coordination, planning and delivery of health humanitarian assistance and in post-conflict reconstruction. From 2001 to 2008, he was a Medical Officer at the World Health Organization, where he contributed to this manual. From 2008 he is Director of Health Systems for the International Rescue Committee. He has conducted missions to Afghanistan, Angola, the Balkans, Democratic Republic of Congo, Liberia, Iraq, Somalia, Sudan and Uganda. His professional interests include health systems analysis, post-conflict transitions, health information management and field epidemiology.
